

Coopershill and the Environment

All at Coopershill are aware of our responsibility to manage the environmental impact of our business and have assessed our activities to determine the nature of that impact.

Our performance so far:

Heating:

Taking advantage of windblown timber from the 500 acre estate, the public rooms are heated by burning stoves and an open fire.

Fresh Water:

We collect rain water from the roof and supplement it with our own spring water. It then goes through a natural filtration process before arriving in our taps.

Waste Water:

All waste water is treated in our own septic tank and then a wetlands reed bed. The pure water leaving there is tested regularly.

Recycling:

Fruit and vegetable waste is composted and put back into our gardens or fed to our livestock. Plastic, glass and paper are separated and recycled. Newspapers are turned into bedding for local stables.

Electricity:

Our electricity provider sources 80% of its power from renewable sources, primarily wind.

Food:

Our own vegetable and fruit gardens provide much of the produce for the table in season. At other times we strive to buy as locally as possible with a preference for organic produce. 100% of our meat comes from the locality and we have our own deer farm. On a day when Venison is on the menu we can boast that the distance from farm to fork is about 500 metres!

Estate Management:

We are farming organically guaranteeing measures to care for the land such as the preservation of stone walls & hedgerows, care of our livestock and the promotion of bio-diversity in our wild flora and fauna. In our extensive woodland we grow beautiful hardwoods such as beech, oak and ash and are part of ongoing national Native Woodland Improvement schemes to encourage indigenous species. In the last 5 years we planted over 6,000 hardwood trees at Coopershill on an estate that already had extensive woodland. We encourage wildlife by preserving habitat and allowing no shooting on our property.

EU Ecolabel Flower Accreditation:

Coopershill was awarded the Eu Eco-Label in June 2009, the first luxury property in the UK or Ireland to achieve this. The Eu Eco-label is the only sign of environmental good practice that is independently certified and recognised throughout the EU. For more information see www.ecolabel-tourism.eu

If you would like to help:

Above all Coopershill should be a place for you to relax and be happy. The following small steps should not detract from your enjoyment of a wonderful stay but over time they will have a positive impact on our environment. Please:

- Avoid leaving the tap running when brushing your teeth
- If you see a leak please tell a member of staff
- Close the windows if you have the heating on
- Separate your waste for recycling
- Turn off the lights and heating when you leave your room
- Consider a car free day while at Coopershill and enjoy some of the many walks on the estate
- Tell people about our environmental programme
